

PACIFIC CROSSING GUIDE - 4TH EDITION, 2024

Weblink Supplement - 2025

Books are wonderful things. They do add weight to your vessel, admittedly, but they are easy to handle, don't depend on electricity and, I hope, look good on your bookshelf.

These days, however, there is much more information on the internet than could ever be summarized in a book. So it makes sense to provide links to further reading and helpful sites, which we do throughout the Pacific Crossing Guide - more than 800 links altogether.

But you can't just click on the links in a physical book. And some of those links will inevitably change or die over time. The purpose of this Supplement, therefore, is to provide you with links you can click, and to keep the links as up to date as possible. We will re-issue the Supplement periodically, adding updates to the substantive text of the book itself as and when we receive suggestions and input.

Some readers may print out the Supplement in order to have the most current links in hard copy. If a web address is short, then it is easy enough just to type it into a browser. Some of the web addresses cited in the Guide, however, are impossibly long or are hard to type because they have strings of numbers. So for a selection of links, we are providing QR codes as an experiment. The criterion for QR codes is primarily the length or complexity of a link, and secondarily its importance; most of them, therefore, are in Part Two. If the codes prove popular, we will expand the number.

The Supplement also provides an opportunity to add new information to the Guide, to update information that becomes out of date and generally to make improvements. So please send us any input you might have. The email address is:

In this section we are providing updates to the substantive text of the original printed version of the book.

The updates are gathered from reader input (thank you), various WhatsApp and Facebook groups for areas of the Pacific, Noonsite, personal experience, etc., but they are not exhaustive and doubtless there are many more updates and improvements that could be made, so please keep the input coming.

For the most current situation, especially on topics like formalities, it is always worth continuing to check Noonsite and apps like noforeignland and Zulu Offshore as well as seeking advice on WhatsApp and Facebook.

| 49   | Lithium batteries   | Although this section remains valid, it is worth noting that lithium batteries are becoming increasingly common in the Pacific cruising fleet                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |                           |
| 101  | Starlink            | As anticipated, Starlink has continued to evolve rapidly, for example expanding geographical coverage (though not yet universally across the Pacific, including local French Polynesia plans), introducing smaller dishes, reducing power consumption, making DC power input possible and changing its subscription plans, including a plan for ocean use away from land. This has all generally been very positive for cruisers and Starlink is now becoming very common on cruising boats. The best ways to keep on top of Starlink's frequent changes are to check their website (#233 on the next tab) and/or follow the Starlink for Sailboats Facebook Group (#246). There is a useful September 2025 summary from s/v Roam here: https://www.sailroam.com/p/starlink but even this is being overtaken by changes Starlink is continuing to make. | Starlink, s/v Roam, other |

| 135  | Southern California | Although there are many isolated anchorages in the Channel Islands, arranging visitors' berths in the mainland marinas in Southern California can be surprisingly difficult for foreign vessels, especially older boats built before 2000. So it is worth planning out mainland moves and making reservations well in advance so as not to be left without a berth.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                       | s/v Cosmic Dancer         |

| 136  | San Diego        | There is useful 2025 detail for San Diego, Shelter Island and Glorietta Bay/Marina on the RCCPF pilotage information database : https://pfcruisingnotes.rcc.org.uk/ Key points: 1. Both anchoring and berthing at the Municipal town dock require that you first create an online account with the San Diego Harbor authorities, before you can make a reservation at either. This can take some time, so begin well in advance of your arrival. 2. Shelter Island Basin anchorage is well sheltered and very convenient for access to marine services. 3. Glorietta Bay has a 72 hour maximum stay. 4. The A9 Cruiser Anchorage is the least attractive and furthest away from shoreside facilities.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            | s/v Cosmic Dancer                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                              |

| 167  | Cook Islands     | In 2025, Cook Island officials were reminding yachts not to make unauthorized arrivals at any island or port other than Avatiu and Arutanga, including Suwarrow and Penhryn. Penhryn is normally possible, with prior authorization, if there is a Customs officer there - check with the authorities.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             | Noonsite. | 168  | Arutanga Harbor  | Channel reported to be 3.5-4 meters in 2025. It is marked and there are some lights but entry in the dark would be dangerous. The current varies; cruisers report less than 2 knots to 5 knots. The harbour reconstruction is still in progress in 2025 and bears little resemblance to the current satellite imagery or charts. Two berms have been created. The westerly one is dredged to 4 metres and is suitable for monohulls. The southerly one can accommodate shallow draft craft on either side. All vessels anchor in mud and reverse onto the berm securing the stern with at least 2 long lines ashore. Monohulls will need 40 meters of rope for each shoreline and a rope or chain sling around a boulder anchor. There are concrete anchor points on the southerly berm where the catamarans berth. Docking assistance is very useful and in 2025 a volunteer cruisers 'Aitutaki Welcoming Committee' WhatsApp group coordinated shore assistance for new arrivals. | 168  | Niue                   | Call Niue Radio on VHF Ch. 16 before arrival to arrange a time for clearance. All moorings are in deep water and either designed for boats of 30'-50' (with a 2 ton concrete block) or 50'-80' (with an 4 ton concrete block). The rope riser has an eye at the buoy and there is also usually a pick up buoy, though in 2025 some pick ups were missing.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                  | s/v Shimshal II                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |
| 172  | Neiafu moorings        | There are a lot of moorings, some of which are private but most available for rent from Beluga Diving. Contact Beluga on VHF Ch. 11 to find out which ones will become vacant. Most, but not all, have pickup buoys. $20TOP/night for a monohull in 2025. Beluga moorings are yellow. Anchoring is deep and there are restrictions marked on the most up to date Navionics charts. Showers, cafes, toilets and garbage are all marked separately. In 2025 there were petrol shortages but diesel was easily obtained. 5 knot speed limit in the harbour which is frequently ignored by tenders. No holding tank pump out. | s/v Shimshal II                                                                                                                                                                                                                                             |

| 252  | Philippines formalities              | Under a new rule introduced in 2024, yachts are required to request a pre-departure inspection from the Philippine Coast Guard before each departure from a Philippine port, including a crew list, proof of valid visas, a voyage plan and emergency contact information. The PCG may also ask to see a certificate of ownership, a recreational boat certificate and a ship station license. On arrival in a Philippine port, marina or anchorage, yachts are required to submit their PCG clearance from their last port to the Coast Guard, along with notice of deviations from the prior voyage plan and any "ship-to-ship interface during the just concluded voyage, if any." In 2024-25, it has not been practical for the PCG to enforce these rules strictly in all the tiny ports and anchorages that yachts visit, most of which do not have PCG Stations. But be prepared to comply, particularly in larger towns or harbors with PGC Stations. Under the 2024 rule, ports and marinas providing services to yachts are required to ensure that departing yachts have obtained PCG departure clearance. | Philippine Coast Guard                                                  |

| 252, 254-5 | Davao                 | In 2025, the Philippine Bureau of Customs in Davao (only) instituted a non-standard interpretation of the Customs rules relating to foreign pleasure vessels. The result was to make Davao bureaucratically inhospitable to visiting yachts. Holiday Oceanview Marina stopped accepting new arrivals. It is to be hoped that the problem will be resolved soon. In the meantime, it is best to avoid Davao. Full details are available on Noonsite, where updates will be posted. Surigao is the best alternative (see 255 below).https://www.noonsite.com/news/philippines-davao-cruisers-advised-to-avoid-the-area/?highlight=davao | s/v Plainsong, WhatsApp and Facebook groups |

| 255        | Surigao               | In contrast to Davao and on the initiative of its Mayor, Surigao (which is a different Customs jurisdiction) has made a special effort to be welcoming to foreign yachts. Although the anchorage can be uncomfortable in a brisk NE'ly, you can be sure of a smooth process from officials. There are updated details on the anchorage and the Hinatuan Passage between Surigao and the Pacific in the notes cited in 253 above.                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                                            | Philippines WhatsApp group, s/v Plainsong   |
| 261, 266   | Wakayama              | Until the past couple of years, Wakayama was an excellent port of entry for Japan, where it was easy to obtain the important Naikosen Customs document. Most recently, however, boats under 20m arriving at Wakayama have been told that they must use an agent (which is probably legally incorrect) and have had difficulties obtaining a Naikosen. This may change again as Customs officials get rotated from office to office, but for now, at least, both Kirk Patterson of Konpira Consulting and other cruisers are recommending avoiding Wakayama. For this area, Kirk recommends Shin Nishinomiya instead. https://sinnisi-yh.co.jp/                                                                      | s/v Totem, Konpira Consulting, others       |

| 265  | Cruising in Japan | In 2025 there were some incidents in which foreign sailors caused frustration among local sailors and non-sailors, for example by staying too long in a scarce mooring spot (walls are generally for short stays only) or by not following garbage rules (which are complicated and differ from place to place: it's important to ask the locals) or misusing marina facilities, not paying bills, etc. - a bad littany. A few harbors have put up 'No Cruisers' signs. Most cruisers encounter an extraordinary welcome and generosity which are among some of the greatest joys of cruising in Japan. As Scott of s/v Tengah has commented on WhatsApp, "Japan is struggling with overtourism on land; let's ensure the cruising community continues to be seen as respectful and welcome." | WhatsApp discussion, other |
